Pip

and the Golden Bell

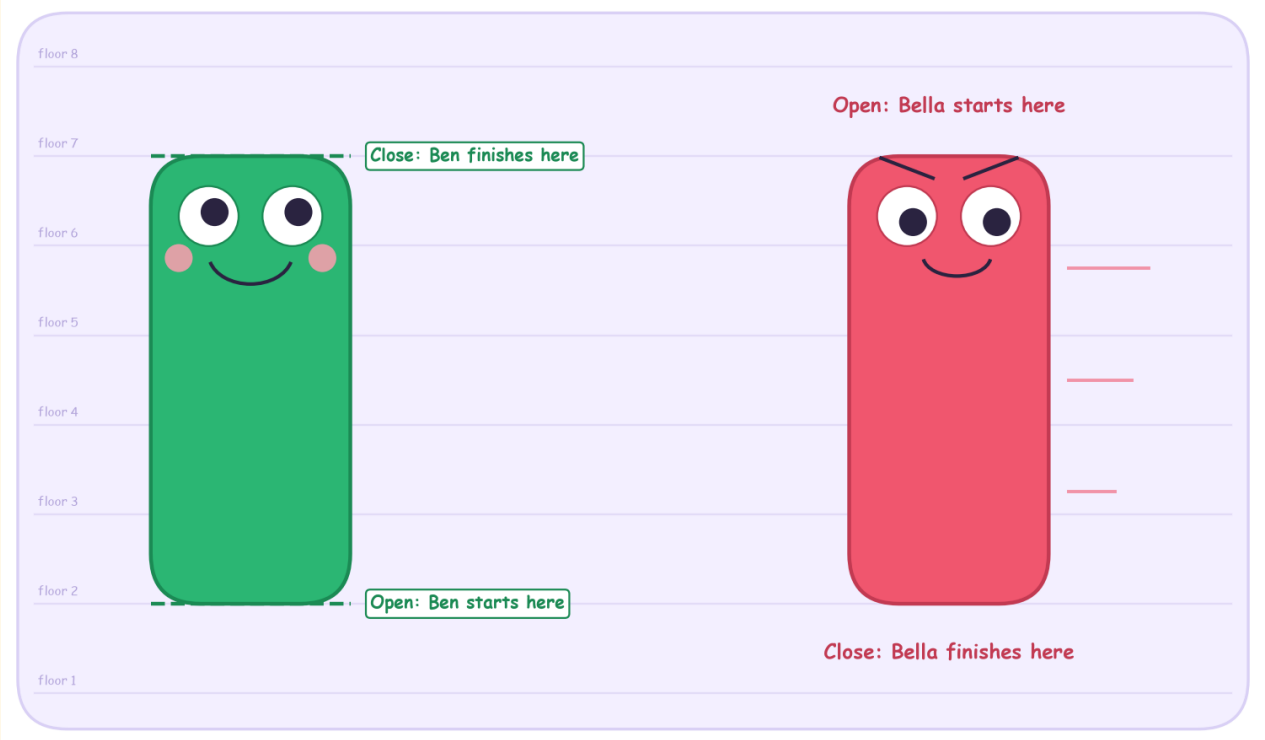

A Candle Kingdom bedtime story

For children aged 6 to 10 and the grown-ups who read to them

CHAPTER 1

Once Upon a Time

Once upon a time, in a land of very tall towers, there was a kingdom called Candle Kingdom.

In the tallest tower lived the candle people. Every floor of the tower had a number, and everybody in the kingdom wanted to know one thing: will the candle people go UP the tower, or DOWN?

When a candle person climbs up, they wear a green coat. When they slide down, they wear a red coat.

Each candle person gets one turn. They start on one floor, and when the Evening Bell rings, they stop on another. Their coat stretches all the way from where they started to where they stopped.

CHAPTER 2

Coats Count, Arms Don't!

Candle people have a funny secret: their arms and legs are stretchy!

While they walk, they stretch way up and way down to peek at other floors. But when the Evening Bell rings... SNAP! Their arms and legs spring right back.

So the most important rule in all of Candle Kingdom is this:

Only where your COAT stops counts. Arms and legs never count.

Can you say it with me? "Coats count, arms don't!"

CHAPTER 3

A Very Special Family

At the very top of the tower lived a family.

Grandma Wendy was the biggest of them all. She is wise and she is slow: one of her steps takes a whole week.

Papa Dan is big and strong. One of his steps takes a whole day.

And little Pip, Papa's daughter, is quick as a mouse. She takes six small steps every day.

On the roof of the tower hangs the shiny Golden Bell. It rings whenever the family's story moves on, so nobody in the kingdom misses a thing.

Let's find out how it goes!

CHAPTER 4

Fences and Jumps

Whenever a candle person climbs up (green) and the very next one slides down (red), they leave a little fence at the top of the green coat.

A new fence is still a bit wobbly. It becomes a real, strong fence once a later candle walks down below it.

Now, to jump a fence, your coat must stop above it when the bell rings. Poking your arm over the top doesn't count! (Remember: coats count, arms don't.)

When Papa Dan jumps one of his fences, everyone shouts: "BREAKOUT!"

CHAPTER 5

Pip Runs After Papa

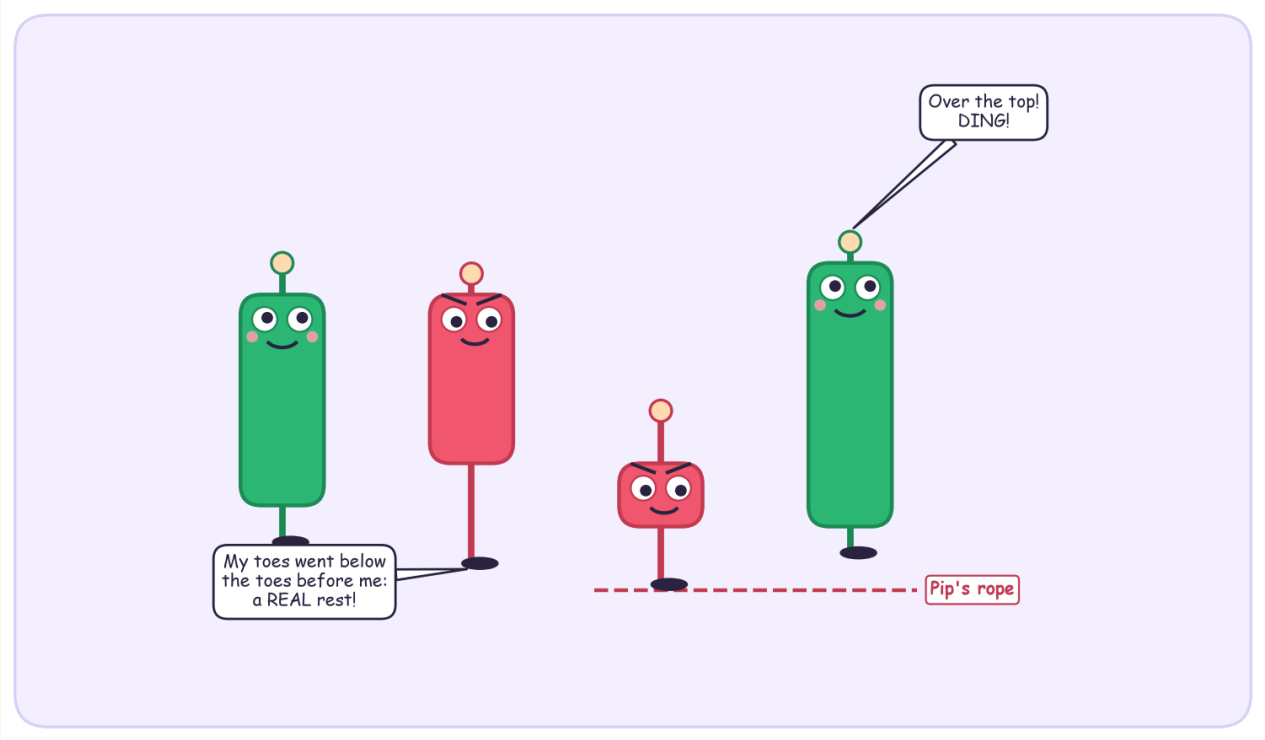

DING! Papa's jump rings the Golden Bell for the very first time. Now everybody knows which way the family is going.

Little Pip runs the same way. Each time her coat stops above her last high spot, the bell gives a small encore: DING!

Pip is careful. She ties a safety rope to the lowest spot she pushed off from, and each time she climbs higher, her rope comes up with her.

CHAPTER 6

A Real Rest

Not every stop is a real rest. Sometimes Pip just pauses for a breath, and that doesn't count at all.

It is only a real rest when her toes reach lower than the toes of the candle before her.

Only after a real rest does a new high spot ring the encore bell. Toes can tell us she rested, but only a coat can jump.

And sometimes Pip is so quick that she does both in one turn: her toes dip below the toes before her, and her coat still stops above the high spot. DING! That counts too, and her rope moves up to those toes.

CHAPTER 7

The Rope Snaps

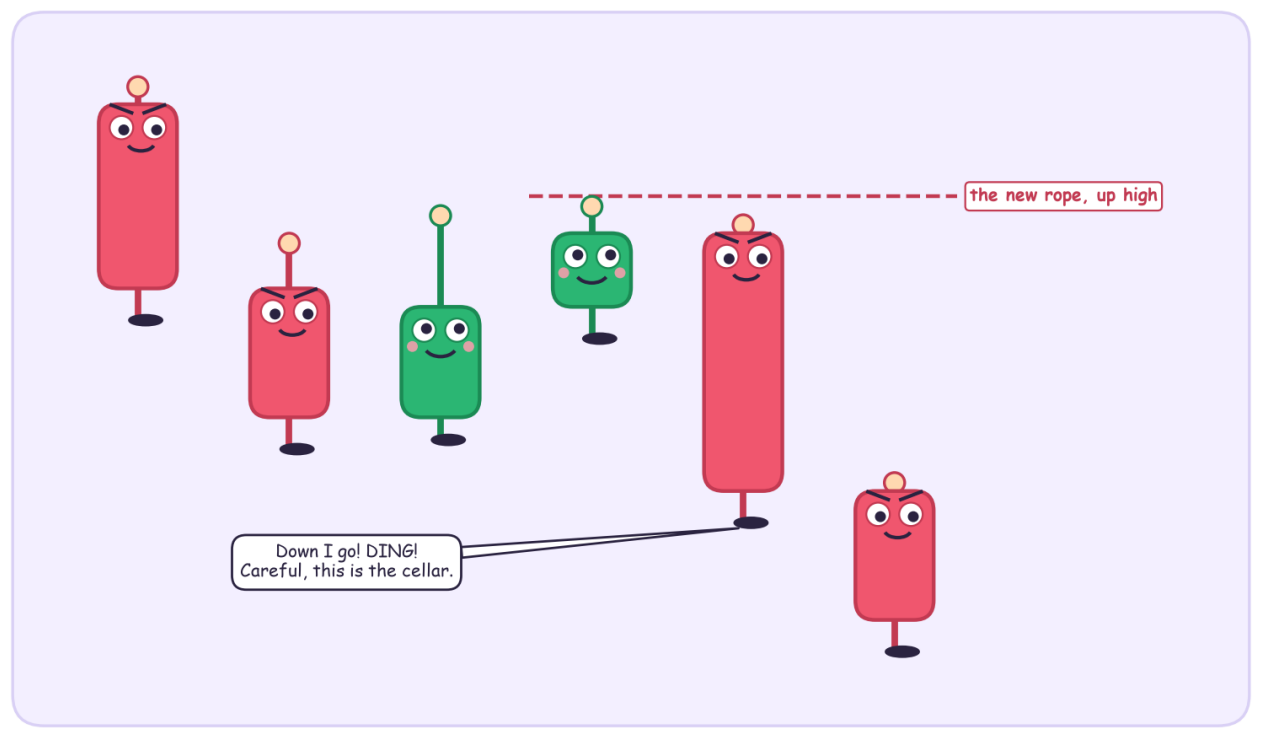

One evening Pip got tired and started to slide. Down, down, down she went, until her coat stopped below her rope.

SNAP! DING! The rope was broken. "Papa is resting too," she said. "This is his pullback."

Now everyone looks at Papa's house. It has a roof, a floor and a middle floor. Below the middle floor is the bargain cellar, and above it is the fancy attic.

CHAPTER 8

Pip Walks the Other Way

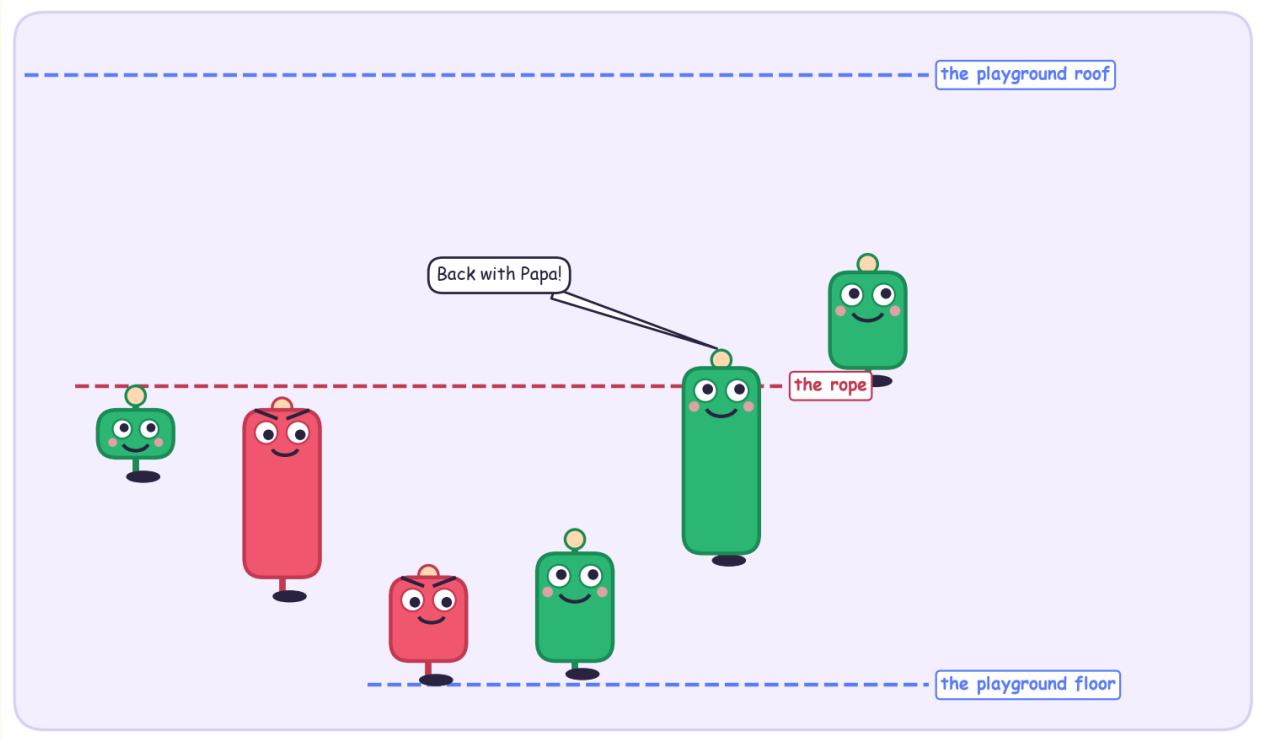

Now Pip walks down, the opposite way to Papa. Each time her coat stops below her last low spot, the bell rings an encore.

She ties a new rope up high, at the last high spot that sent her lower.

But Pip is careful in the cellar. "Down here," she whispers, "Papa might wake up at any time."

CHAPTER 9

Pip Turns Back: The Playground

One morning Pip's coat stopped above her new rope. DING! She was going Papa's way again!

And now she has a playground. Its floor is the lowest place she went, and its roof is the top of her climb. The playground is always inside Papa's house.

Inside it she still ties her rope. If her coat stops higher, the bell rings. If her coat stops below the rope, the bell rings too, because she is still deciding.

CHAPTER 10

The Toys in the Playground

On the way up, Pip left toys behind her, and these are the places grown-ups watch: soft cushions (FVGs), stepping stones (OCs) and little dips (V-shapes).

When toys sit right next to each other, Pip piles them together into one big heap, to keep the playground tidy.

If a coat ever stops right through a toy, that toy is gone.

CHAPTER 11

Over the Roof

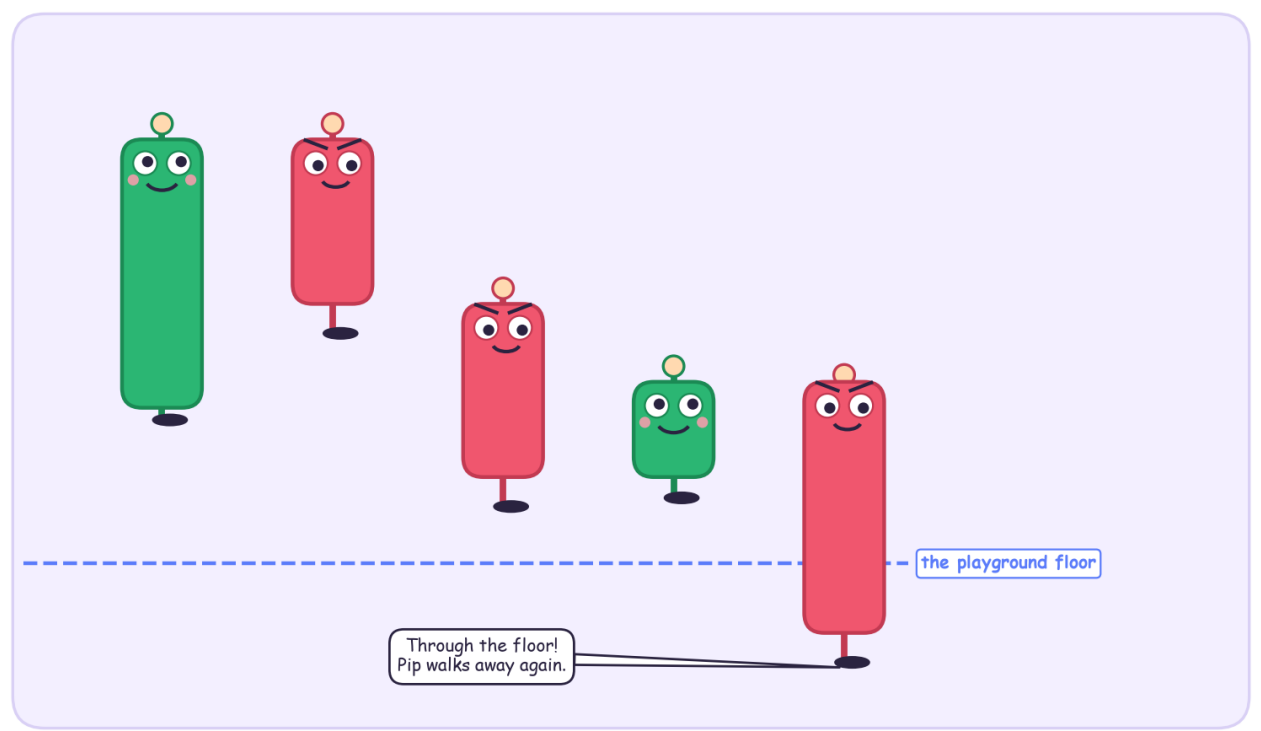

One day Pip's coat stopped above the playground roof. DING!

"Papa is going on!" she shouted. Off she ran with a brand-new rope, and the whole story started climbing again.

CHAPTER 12

Through the Floor

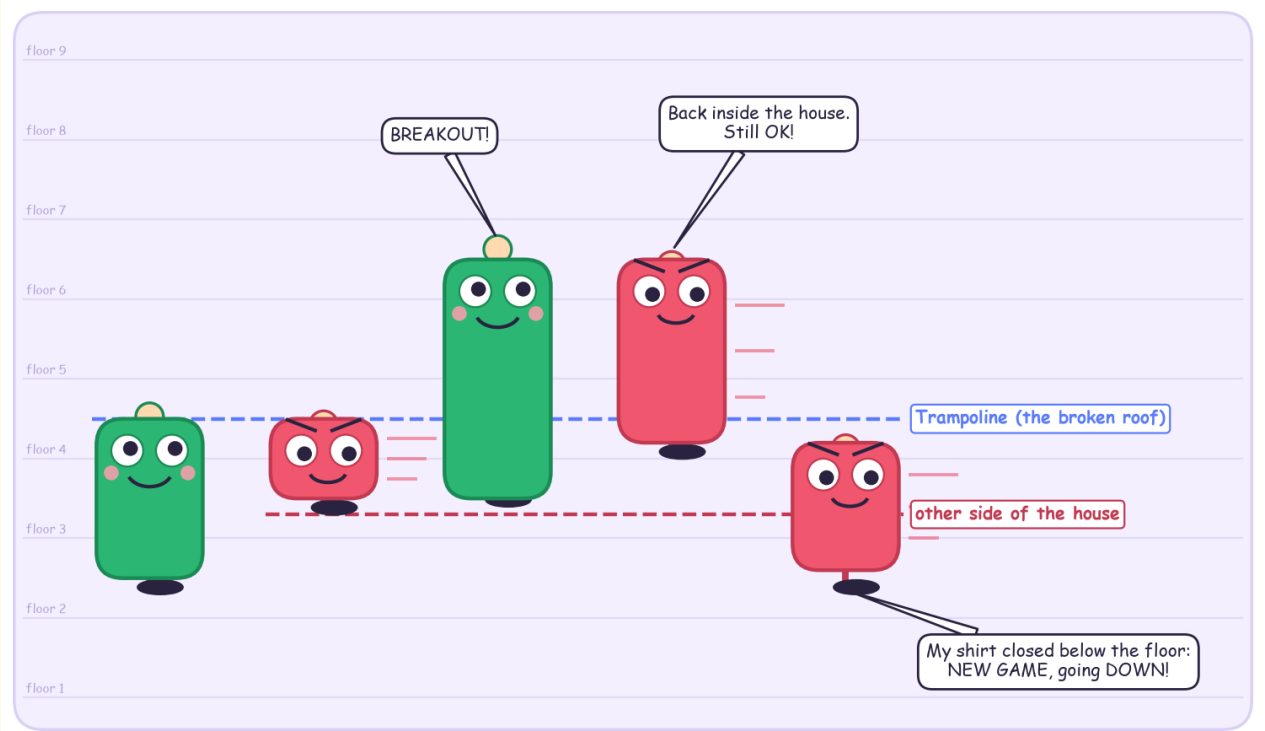

But some days it goes the other way. Pip's coat stops below the playground floor. DING!

"I am walking away from Papa again," she says. And she walks on down until the day she turns back.

CHAPTER 13

When the Wind Changes

If Papa's coat ever stops below the floor of his house, the wind has changed.

The old game ends, and a brand-new game begins: this time going DOWN. Everything happens the mirror way, in red coats.

CHAPTER 14

Tiny Tia's Secret Signals

Pip has a tiny sister called Tia. Tia's steps are the smallest of all.

Grown-ups who want to trade pick their own spot in the playground, often right by a toy, and wait for Tia to give a secret signal there. A Peek-and-Hold is when she peeks over a line and holds back. There are other signals too, and each grown-up ticks the ones they want to hear.

Signals far away from their spot? Shhh. No ring.

The Golden Bell's Secret

And so, this is the story the Golden Bell tells:

1. Papa jumps his fence. DING!
2. Pip runs after him, with her rope coming up behind her. Ding, ding!
3. Her rope snaps. Papa is resting. DING!
4. Pip walks the other way. Careful in the cellar! Ding, ding!
5. Pip turns back, and now she has a playground full of toys. DING!
6. Over the roof, Papa goes on. Through the floor, Pip walks away again. DING!

And never forget the kingdom's golden rule: coats count, arms don't. Only where the coat stops, when the bell rings.

And they climbed happily ever after. The End.

Ready doesn't mean sure. Even when every bell rings, the twins can still surprise us. That's why grown-ups always plan what to do if they're wrong.

For Grown-Ups

Every picture in this book is drawn from real open, high, low and close values. The rules match the MummyTKT Strategy Rulebook exactly. Here is the story word for each real term:

Green coat / red coat	bullish candle (close above open) / bearish candle (close below open)
Coat	candle body (open to close): only the close counts, at the candle close
Stretchy arms and legs	wicks (high and low)
Grandma Wendy / Papa Dan / Pip / Tia	Weekly / Daily / H4 / lower-timeframe candles
Papa jumping his fence	Daily breakout, a Daily close beyond the external high or low
The Golden Bell	an alert
Encore	H4 continuation
A real rest	a real pullback: a candle's wick took out the previous candle's low
Pip's rope	the pullback line
The rope snaps	pullback confirmed: an H4 close beyond the line
Papa's house, middle floor, cellar, attic	the Daily range, its 0.5, discount, premium
The new rope up high	the H4 key level: the last high that broke a low
Pip turns back	H4 pullback: back in alignment
The playground, roof, floor	the H4 range, its high, its low
Toys: cushions, stepping stones, little dips	reaction zones: FVG, OC, V-shape (A-shape for sells)
A heap of toys	merged zones
Over the roof / through the floor	H4 range high broken (the Daily continues) / H4 range low broken (H4 against the Daily again)
Wind changes	Daily breakout the other way: a mirrored story
Peek-and-Hold and other signals	entry formations at the levels you choose

Directional bias education only, not financial advice. Trading carries real risk and is for adults.